TREASURE BEYOND KLONDIKE YIELDS

Frazier River Regions Teeming With Tons of Gold.

To Obtain It Operations Must Be on a Large Scale.

Hydraulic Machinery Necessary to Extract the Wealth of Quartz in Miles of Mountains.

In 1859 the Frazier River in British Columbia and the streams emptying into it were found by a party of prospectors to be gold bearing. In a year's time the country was thickly settled by gold seekers from all parts of the world. The excitement at the time was as great as that which has been made in Alaska, Africa, Australia and in various parts of our own country. Towns and communities sprang up almost in the twinkling of an eye and men and women eagerly sought their fortunes in the new fields. The mines from the time of their discovery until 1875 produced prodigiously. It is not accurately known what amount of gold was taken out. At any rate, it reached hundreds of millions, and men who went there poor came away princes of the money world.

The Frazier River, which together with its tributaries, produced the great wealth, rises on the east slopes of the Cascade range of mountains and flows in a southerly direction emptying into the Pacific at Vancouver. The most notable gold-producing mountains are the Williams and the Williams and Lightning Creeks, from which $10,000,000 have been taken since their discovery. Since 1875 the gold-bearing mountains have been abandoned. The reason for this was that on account of the primitive mining methods in use gold could not be taken out in paying quantities. The mountains were practically abandoned because of the lack of more modern dredging machinery, were abandoned.

The most of these mines were located in what is known as the Caribou district. Within the past few years the attention of capitalists has been directed to undeveloped claims of this section, and as a result the country is again assuming the aspect of the old gold fields. The mountains are now being worked on a large scale. The reason for this is that the primitive mining methods in use gold could not be taken out in paying quantities. The mountains were practically abandoned because of the lack of more modern dredging machinery, were abandoned.

Nervous Dyspepsia

To Gain Flesh, to Sleep Well, to Know What Affects and Good Digestion Mean.

MAKE A TEST OF STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS.

No trouble is more common or more mischievous than nervous dyspepsia. People having it think their nerves are to blame and are surprised that they are not cured by nerve medicines. The real seat of the mischief is the stomach. The stomach is the organ to be looked after. Nervous dyspepsia often do not have any pain whatever in the stomach, nor perhaps any of the usual symptoms of stomach weakness. Nervous dyspepsia shows itself in the stomach so much as in nearly every organ. In some cases the heart palpitate and is irregular; in others the bowels are constipated, with headaches; still others are troubled with loss of flesh and appetite with accumulations of gas, sour risings and heartburn. They cure sour stomach, gas, loss of flesh and appetite, sleeplessness, palpitation, heartburn, constipation and headache. Send for valuable little book on stomach diseases by addressing P. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. All druggists sell full-sized packages at 50 cents. Prof. Henry W. Becker, M.D., the well known religious worker and writer of St. Louis, Secretary of the Mission Board of the German Methodist Church, Chief Clerk of the St. Louis Board of Christian Education and Wharf Commissioner, Public Secretary for the St. Louis School Patrons' Association, and the District Commissioner of St. Louis, has written a valuable little book on stomach diseases. It is a most interesting and instructive work, and is a most valuable addition to the library of every one interested in the subject.

Some weeks ago my brother heard me say something about stomach diseases. He was a box from his pocket said, "Try Stuart's Tablets." I did, and was promptly relieved. Then I investigated the nature of the tablets and found that they were made of just the right things and in just the right proportions to aid in the assimilation of food. I heartily recommend them to all who are troubled with stomach diseases. I keep them constantly on hand."

able that explorers have been unable to penetrate them. It is unknown what they contain, but judging from the gold-bearing streams which in places issue from them it is very probable that they are rich in gold.

WEAK SPOTS IN THE CENSUS BILLS

Alleged Functions of the Proposed Assistant Director.

Plans to Deal Out Spoils to Faithful Party Workers.

Robert P. Porter's Accession to the Ranks of the Civil Service Reformers Causes Concern.

Will the Twelfth Census Office be placed in the classified service? That is a question that is just now of vast interest to a multitude of people. It can be safely said that it will not.

When the work of the Eleventh Census was laid out, when the bill providing for the work was being discussed in Congress, that body was divided by civil service reformers from every corner of the country who urged that appointments to the office be placed in the hands of the Civil Service Commission.

It was pretty well understood that Mr. Robert P. Porter would be superintendent of the work. Mr. Porter, it reports are true, had been singled out by Gen. Harrison to occupy that place in the Eleventh census months before the bill was framed. In fact, Mr. Porter's name was in the way of the framing of that measure. He was careful to see that nothing found its way into it that would subject him to dictation by the civil service reformers. He was dead set against the civil service notion and went so far as to emphatically give his opinion that the civil service reformers would have nothing to do with the Census if the office was to be hampered by civil service law. It was then said that if Mr. Porter had taken any determined stand against it the Eleventh Census office would have been placed in the classified service.

Mr. Porter's experience as superintendent of the Eleventh Census had brought about a wonderful change to the spirit of his dreams and his attitude on appointments to the Twelfth Census office is what is given by the civil service reformers as a deal of concern.

It is conceded that a majority in both the House and Senate are opposed to putting the Twelfth Census establishment in the classified service, but the stand Mr. Porter has taken has made many of those who have been and are now ready to oppose to the civil service idea dubious as to the advisability of the reform. Mr. Porter has taken his stand in the open to the spoilsmen. Mr. Porter has admitted on very many occasions recently that he made a deplorable mistake in opposing the civil service in the former Census Office, and that his opposition tended to the detriment of the work. He has said that the greater part of his time as superintendent was wasted in listening to importunities from all sorts of people for positions; that night and day he was beset by Senators, Representatives, bureau chiefs and other officials, and that his time was simply wasted, so far as the real and important work of his office went. He has said that he has been a victim of the spoils system, and that he has been a victim of the spoils system, and that he has been a victim of the spoils system.

It is this position of Mr. Porter that suggests to some reformers that the office in the House and Senate who do not propose to get the worst of things from the Twelfth Census work is begun, that two superintendents, or directors, as the bills before the Senate and House call them, would be a good idea. This suggestion is viewed with amusement by those who are familiar with census work.
